Notes: The French did not confine themselves to the town of New Amsterdam entirely, but formed settlements on Staten Island, the upper end of Manhattan, Long Island, and in Westchester County.

Staten Island, in the bay of New York, was one of their favorite asylums. “It might properly have been called “Huguenot Island.” A considerable number of refugees settled there in 1657, locating their dwellings near the site of the present town of Richmond. The names of Guion, Dissosway, Bedell, Fontaine, Reseau, La Tourette, Rutan, Puillon, Mercereau, LaConte, Butten, Mancey, Perrin, Larselene, De Pue, Corssen, Martineau, Tuenire, Morgan, Le Guine and Jouerney have been preserved. Like the descendants of the emigrants to Ulster County, the progeny of the refugees to Staten Island still occupy, in many cases, the land held by their ancestors.

No descriptionof his character has been preserved by posterity. The few facts about him in the records indicate he was a determined and spirited person interested in creating a meaningful & successful life. It would appear that he was courageous and not the least bit shy of fighting for what he thought was right. The people of the Ile de Re are known to be independent and strong willed, having suffered persecution for their Protestant beliefs in a country ruled by Catholism.. Francois shared these traits as well. Apparently he had come to New York, to get established & then return for his wife & 3 children, who had all passed away by Aug 1674.
